News Marlboro Bureau

MARLBORO — A Marlboro man who headed a group of youngsters on camping and hiking trips is awaiting grand jury action on 27 counts related to sex offenses involving juveniles. James DeMelia, a former assistant scoutmaster, started a group he called "alternative to boy scouting" named Jimbo's Rangers last November. Marlboro police have since arrested DeMelia, who is now being held for probable cause in Billerica House of Correction in lieu of $54,000 bail, police said.

DeMelia is being held for probable cause.

Reportedly, many children between the ages of nine and 12 were involved in the alleged criminal acts, which took place while the youngsters were led on overnight camping trips to such places as the White Mountains of New Hampshire, police said.

DeMelia, a bachelor and a cook at Framingham State College, was formerly a Webelos master of Pack 38 Cub Scouts and former assistant troopmaster of Troop 10 Boy Scouts. He formed Jimbo's Rangers after leaving the scouting organization with an original nucleus of 12 boys, aged nine through 12. They went on trips to Logan Airport, historical landmarks, and were planning a trip to the White House, Washington D.C., in April.
